May 27, 2017

From CEOs and politicians to philanthropists and entrepreneurs, Crain’s Who’s Who list is just a snapshot of those making an impact on Northeast Ohio. There were no specific criteria used, but our editorial team huddled and determined which leaders we thought every person doing business in the region should know. Special consideration was given to those who go well beyond their official roles to make the region a better place to live and do business.

Baiju Shah
Harrington Project for Discovery & Development

Highlighted involvement: Invacare, Citizens Bank

In the news: The Harrington Project is a major drug development and commercialization effort out of University Hospitals. Stamler is president of Harrington Discovery Institute, the venture's nonprofit arm, while Shah is CEO of BioMotiv, the for-profit accelerator associated with the project. The institute, meanwhile, provides millions of dollars annually in financial and commercialization support to 35 Harrington Scholars across North America and the United Kingdom.

Dr. Jonathan Stamler
Harrington Project for Discovery & Development

Highlighted involvement: (Jonathan) Institute for Transformative Molecular Medicine

In the news: The Harrington Project is a major drug development and commercialization effort out of University Hospitals. Stamler is president of Harrington Discovery Institute, the venture's nonprofit arm, while Shah is CEO of BioMotiv, the for-profit accelerator associated with the project. The institute, meanwhile, provides millions of dollars annually in financial and commercialization support to 35 Harrington Scholars across North America and the United Kingdom.
Thomas F. Zenty
CEO, University Hospitals

Highlighted involvement: Governor’s Executive Workforce Board, Greater Cleveland Partnership, United Way of Greater Cleveland

In the news: Fresh off a series of acquisitions, Zenty said recently UH in 2016 had its strongest year in the system’s 150-year history. Building upon that news, UH recently announced it had reached its $1.5 billion fundraising goal for its Discover the Difference campaign, which has supported much of its high-profile expansions in recent years.

Full List: http://www.crainscleveland.com/awards/whos_who?format=table